Full STEAM Ahead! is an innovative literacy series for early readers that provides an introduction to STEAM subjects. Twenty titles are divided into each of the five STEAM subjects.

Two new titles have been added to Arts In Action, a set of books that explores different mediums, tools, and principles in art. Young readers will observe and identify art forms around them and consider elements that connect various art disciplines. An activity in each title helps children connect core arts concepts to other STEAM topics.

A link printed inside each book gives readers access to Crabtree Plus, a website with supplemental digital content and activities that reinforce and extend key series' concepts.

From The Five Parts of Art

Artists Use Lines

Lines are outlines or edges of shapes and objects. They let us see the shapes an artist creates.

Artists used different kinds of lines to paint these colorful bowls.

Lines can be straight or wavy. They can have curved or sharp corners. They can be thick or thin. Artists use different kinds of lines to send different messages.

An artist used wavy lines to paint the waves in the ocean. The wavy lines show how the water is always moving.

An artist used straight lines to draw these trees. Straight lines show how the trees stand up tall.
